What exactly should be considered as traction?

This is no hard and fast rule, as every industry has different metrics for traction. Here is a list of common metrics that are used.

1. SALES

This is the best form of traction. Using sales numbers, you can prove that your idea is working. With the help of sales, you can show that your company is able to sell products. For example, you are selling Rs.1 lakh worth of product every month, and the next month you are selling good worth Rs.2 lakhs, and in the following months, you are selling products for Rs.3,4 and 5 lacs; this is a good example of traction. You can say that these are early signs of success.

Now for some investors, they may consider ₹5 lacs as decent traction, whereas others investors may not invest below 20 lacs. These level of traction is a key decision driver for investments.