Invest when something is changing

New Product Launch

With market changes, new opportunities open up. It can be a good time to take a look at those companies that are participating in such opportunities. If a company launches a new product, it is a good time to invest after evaluating the product and the market.

Management Change

A company may not be well run in recent years, but if the management has changed, we can have a fresh look at the company and it might be a good time to analyze and invest.

Next Generation Entering Business

It can be an opportunity to buy if the next-generation of the promotor's family is entering the business. They may bring new changes with them. Thus, the company is worth taking a look at.

Merger and Aquisition

Mergers and acquisitions are transactions in which two companies join forces and merge into one. It can generate a lot of synergies, but it can also be risky and should be evaluated. But it can be a good opportunity to evaluate.

Entry in New Markets

When companies enter a new market, for example, if an Indian company begins its operations in China, Japan, or the United States, we can expect that company captures a portion of the market and thus can be an opportunity to invest.

When business changes fundamentally, past valuations do not apply.

"Understanding these changes takes a lot of time and skill. Retail investors must be extremely selective in this area and stick to what they truly understand. A retail investor is best advised to keep investing as simple as possible."
