

If a team has numerous young players but established players at its core, it can choose to retain most or all these players and save on player acquisition costs. Other teams who do not have players who are young and regular performers cannot retain players at the same scale.

Similarly, for a cement company, logistics costs are as important as manufacturing costs. So, if a cement company is part of a group that also owns logistics companies, as a result, it will have a cost advantage over its competitors.

Similarly, if a cement company has its production facilities near a region where a lot of infrastructure, commercial and residential projects will be taking place. Then, companies from other regions might not be able to deliver cement at the same price because they will incur higher logistics expenses.