

controlled. Signs of their warrior past remain in their ritual costumes, which feature animal skins, spears, and shields. Some Zulus live in traditional homesteads known as umuzis, which are arranged in a circle.

Many umuzis are on land owned by white farmers, and at least one family member holds down a paying job. Other umuzis are open to the public and their inhabitants make a living from tourism.

GOING TO SCHOOL

Most of South Africa's three million Zulus live in the countryside of Kwa-Zulu Natal, herding cattle and growing crops. Like all South African children, Zulu children go to school until the age of 15.

Two isangomas participate in a healing ritual.

BASKETS AND BEADS

Beadwork is a well-developed Zulu craft. If a woman has, or would like, a relationship with a particular man she can send a subtle message to him through her jewelry. Zulu basketwork is much admired too. Baskets are even watertight enough to hold liquids, thanks to the tight weave and to the fact that the liquid in the baskets causes the fibers to swell.

MINING FOR COAL

Zulus do some of the hardest and most poorly paid jobs in South Africa. Many Zulu men live and work in South Africa's coal mines hundreds of miles from Kwa-Zulu Natal. The men usually live in basic dormitory accommodation, only returning to see their wives and families for a few days once or twice a year.
