

THE ENGLISH PEOPLE THEMSELVES

ENGLISH

A PATCHWORK NATION

often feel uncertain about the difference between the United Kingdom, Great Britain, and England. The United Kingdom is the name of the country that consists of Great

Englishness today

Unlike Americans, English people tend not to describe themselves as English. Perhaps this is because English people are descended from a mixture of so many groups: Romans, Normans, Danes, Vikings, and Celts. More recently, waves of immigration in the 19th and 20th century have brought substantial numbers of people from almost every corner of the globe to England.

A plush lawn, a slightly overcast sky, and a cathedral form the perfect backdrop for a cricket match.

MOST POPULAR DISH

There are more traditional contenders for the English national dish, (among them roast beef, or fish and chips) but “curry”—referring to almost any Indian dish—is without doubt England’s most popular meal. Indian restaurants and carry outs exist in every English city, town, and perhaps, village.

SPORTING PASSION

The game of cricket traveled around the globe with English colonial administrators in the 19th and 20th centuries. The English are still passionate about it, playing games on village greens in the summer.

MULTICULTURAL MARKET

English cities are home to immigrants from all corners of the Earth. The British Empire forged a bond between England and many African, Asian, and Caribbean countries. Migrants, especially those from former colonies, have helped to keep England vibrant.

