

Muslims. They believe strictly in one God and in reincarnation, and do not accept converts into their religion. Men are forbidden from having more than one wife. There may be as many as one million Druze people alive today but it is difficult to know the exact number since many practice their faith privately while outwardly conforming to the local religion. Most live in the mountain regions of Syria, Lebanon, Israel, and Jordan.

A PLACE OF PILGRIMAGE

Druze believe in seven prophets—Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, Mohammed, and Mohammed ibn Ismail al-Darazi. They also revere Jethro, Moses' father-in-law. He is said to be buried at Nebe Shu'eib in northern Israel. Every April Druze make a pilgrimage to this site.

MOUNT HERMON

The Druze town of Majdal Shams is built on the lower slopes of Mount Hermon, Israel's highest mountain. There are four other Druze villages in the area, which was captured by Israel from Syria during a war in 1967. Many Druze have relatives living just across the border in Syria.

ALL DRESSED UP

Druze children in Israel attend schools where they are taught in both Arabic and Hebrew. Many also belong to the Druze wing of the Israeli Scout Organization. Here, Druze schoolgirls wear their best dresses to attend a dance party.
