

The People of East Asia

Tibetan plateau are virtually uninhabited. The people of East Asia practice a wide range of religions and have a rich tapestry of ancient cultures, as well as thriving industrial economies.

TECHNOLOGY

Within the last 50 years countries such as Japan, China, and the Republic of Korea have taken off in terms of technology and industry. Seoul, the capital of the Republic of Korea, is now a sprawling, industrialized city.

MARTIAL ARTS

These famous fighting disciplines from Asia have become popular all over the world as forms of self-defense and self-discipline. Among many others, Tae kwon do comes from Korea, Judo comes from Japan, and Kung fu comes from China.

FESTIVAL

The people of East Asia are renowned for their large, colorful festivals which can last for weeks on end—in China, the Lunar New Year can last up to 15 days. The majority of festivities are religious. Below, towering fruit and flowers are carried at Mengwi Festival, Bali.

Tai Chi is a slow martial art that many Chinese people practice for exercise.

RICE FARMING

Although wheat and tea are widely grown in northern Asia, rice is the chief food of the continent, with more than one-fifth of the world's rice grown in Southeast Asia. Numerous farming villages and shimmering rice paddy fields are scattered across the landscape.
