

KOREANS

A COUNTRY DIVIDED

KOREA TAKES THE FORM OF A PENINSULA stretching southward, like a thumb, from the center of the northeast coast of Asia. Since 1955, the country has been divided into North and South Korea, North

Education

One of the most important elements in Korean life is a good education—teachers are deeply respected and trusted. Children are expected to study hard and parents are encouraged to offer full support for their child's education. Schools are regarded as a kind of extended family.

PLANT A TREE

Each year, school children from all over the Republic of Korea take part in a relatively new annual event, Tree Planting Day. Every child must plant a tree in order to protect the environment.

INDUSTRY

In the 1960s, the Republic of Korea started to change from an agriculturally based country to an industrial one. The incredibly rapid success of their electronics, shipbuilding, communications, and car industries have turned Korea into a model for development worldwide.

The capital of the Republic of Korea is Seoul, which is very modern and industrialized, and full of skyscrapers.
