

Saving lives on the beaches

THE LIFEGUARDS OF NEW ZEALAND'S COASTLINE

NEW ZEALAND IS A MECCA FOR THRILL SEEKERS from all over the world, particularly those looking for thrills on or in the water. Everything from jet-skiing, white-water rafting, kayaking, and diving, to, in particular, surfing and windsurfing are experienced in all weathers nearly all year round. With so much activity on the water Surf Life Saving New Zealand, established in 1934, is an essential organization on the beaches. In their time the lifesavers have saved over 41,000 lives. Competitions between lifesavers are held annually, and lifeguards in this picture race across a beach in the North Island during the Ironman Surf League finals. The competition includes rescue events and surfboard races.
