

SOMETIMES SEEN AS A PALER VERSION OF THE UNITED STATES, CANADIANS

A CULTURAL MOSAIC

Mix and blend

Most Canadians are of French or British descent, but large Italian, Ukrainian, German, and Asian communities are established here too, along with those of other cultures and native (“First Nations”) groups. While the US takes pride in blending nationalities (the “melting-pot” effect), Canada has a mosaic-style multiculturalism that respects the identity of each people.

INDUSTRIAL STRENGTH

During the 20th century, manufacturing overtook agriculture and the exploitation of natural resources to dominate Canada’s economy. Here, a skilled worker adjusts components at a Ford car plant in Ontario.

PLAYING TO WIN

While lacrosse is Canada’s national sport, ice hockey inspires a public passion that makes it top unofficial contender. Here, with the speed and energy that characterize the game, a Canadian player competes against the USSR in the Calgary Olympics.

CITY FISHING

With the Vancouver skyline as a backdrop, two intrepid fishermen position their nets in English Bay, near the city center. Canada’s waters, both inland and coastal, are ideal for fishing, a hugely popular recreational activity as well as an important commercial venture.

A TASTE OF EUROPE

In the province of Quebec, not only is the language French, but the culture and the urban landscapes that support it also feel very European. This typical street scene in the old part of Quebec City, for example, could almost be set somewhere in France.
