

FOR 10 DAYS IN THE MIDDLE OF JULY, the city of Calgary in southern Alberta plays host to one of the biggest rodeos in the world, the Calgary Stampede. Although the Stampede is a major tourist attraction, the competitors are genuine cowboys and cowgirls, as opposed to fringed and beaded performers, and some of the events are extremely dangerous; this is widely considered to be the roughest of all rodeos. Among the best-known and most popular attractions are the heart-stoppingly treacherous chuck-wagon races that are held every night of the competition; the World Championship final provides the traditional highlight of the Stampede's last evening.
