Chalcedony ring | Unpatterned blue chalcedony is relatively uncommon, but comprises this subtle, pastel-blue cabochon set in a 14-karat yellow gold ring.

Russian urn | Carved from a single piece of Ural Mountains jasper, this spectacular multicoloured urn demonstrates the finest in 19th-century lapidary skill and craftsmanship.

Pendant brooch | Bearing the signature E. Paltcho, this beautiful gold-mounted pendant brooch features carnelian leaves and an agate flower, highlighted by diamonds.

Chalcedony's name is thought to originate from the ancient port of Kalkedon in Asia Minor (modern Turkey)

Giardinetto brooch | This fabulous giardinetto brooch features diamond and emerald accented flower heads carved from amethyst, chrysoprase, carnelian, turquoise, and coral.

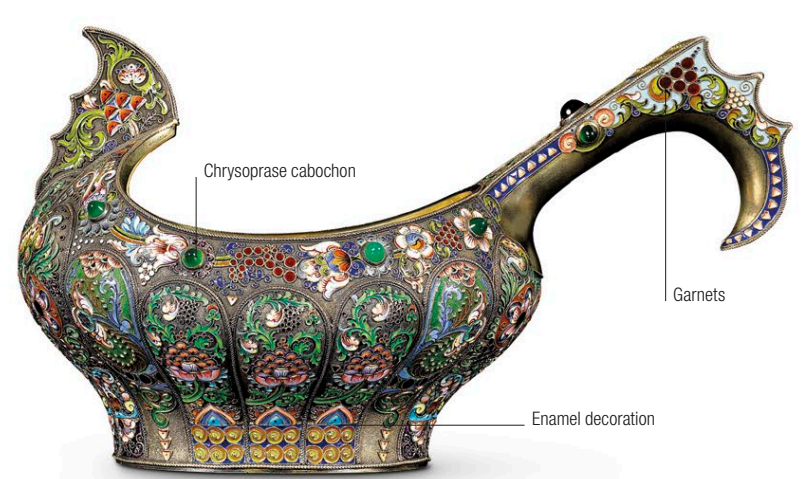

Bloodstone watch case | The back of this open-face pocket watch case is carved from bloodstone, inlaid with 18-karat gold, and surrounded by seed pearls.

Silver pin | Based around four smoky chalcedony cabochons, this silver pin was designed by the influential Danish silversmith Georg Jensen.

Van Cleef & Arpels pendant | Adorned with cabochons of chrysoprase and lapis lazuli, this gold pendant is also set with diamonds in a rope motif.

Silver-gilt kovsh | This stunning kovsh (ceremonial drinking vessel) from Tsarist Russia features the finest in cloisonné enamel, and is highlighted by cabochons of chrysoprase and garnet. A kovsh of this quality would have been a royal gift.
