

Silver artefacts have been discovered that date back to around 4000 BCE

Diamonds totalling 1.55 carats

Aquamarine brooch | This 18th-century brooch, with a 4.80-carat aquamarine, follows the era's fashion for colourful stones set in silver with decorative elements.

Cut-out carving technique

Silver brooch | Arno Malinowski designed this for Georg Jensen in the late 1950s. His work often featured deer: here, the animal's lifelike form is set amid stylized foliage.

Silver Swiss pocket watch | From the 16th century onwards, silver and gold replaced steel as the preferred metals for pocket watches. This one has a split-second dial.

Opal body
Plique-à-jour enamel wings

Cabochon sapphires

Dragonfly brooch | This brooch features a mixture of silver and gems. The dragonfly's articulated tail is made up of diamonds set in silver and sapphires set in gold.

Swing drop earrings | Featuring a pair of baroque pearls, these drop earrings also consist of blackened, 14-karat gold, silver, and brilliant-cut diamonds.

Hair comb | Lucien Gaillard's comb from c.1902–06 is an example of the fashion for silver in the early 20th century. Silver was seen as both modern and functional.

Antique pansy brooch | Made in France, this colourful vintage brooch is made from silver with gold, amethyst, diamonds, and enamel.
