

First, we need to understand what part of the total assets is long term provisions.

Second when the cash outflow will happen.

Third, does the company have enough resources to pay off the long-term provisions?

These are questions we asked so far to understand long-term provisions. Let us ask further questions to understand these more.

Long-term provisions/ CFO

The next question is long-term provisions/CFO. Here, we evaluate how many years will take for the company to repay provisions from CFO. It becomes apparent that the company's long-term provisions are a small part of its yearly income. This means that the long-term provisions are not a significant liability for the company.

Also, we need to understand - what makes up these long-term provisions.
