

However, it is not possible to understand every single small lease, and neither will we have any access to that data. We may be able to access data for smaller companies. Here, we would want to understand:

- ◇ What is the lease structure?
- ◇ How long is the company leasing for?
- ◇ What is the exit clause?

Suppose for a company for which leasing makes a large part of the business - like a warehouse company that leases out their warehouses instead of renting. In such cases where leasing is a significant part of the company's operations, we need to understand the structure, the cost to enter, cancellation clauses, renewal terms, duration, and more for the leases.

When the lease is not a significant part of the business, we may not go into depth.
