

The company might report geographical segmentation, which needs to be tracked.

Some questions that need to be asked from a geographical point of view are:

We also need to understand if there are any risks involved from a geographical point of view.

This way, we can have a total break up of the company's reported revenues, product-wise or geographically. This is important in all cases to understand all such breakups of the company's segments and also the different locations where the company operates.

In the next section, we move further and understand discontinued operations.
