

Only when we look at a large number of companies will we get a reference where we can make better and quick decisions. You will get comfortable with -

What are the cash flow patterns?

What does a ROCE of 15% mean - Is it good or bad? How are the working capital requirements funded?

However, when we do it for 5-6 companies, we can compare the companies. Only when we have such benchmarks can we take a comparative call about which company is better.

We will get comfortable with the data, putting them into chapters, and drawing conclusions.

We should target to understand around five companies in the next three months.
