

Fundraise Takes Time

Fundraise takes time unless one is very well connected. Even if one is connected the process itself takes time. It takes time to find, meet, follow up with the investors, get the commitments, go through the paperwork and close the round.

Thus, fundraising can take anywhere from 3-6 months. It can take longer as well depending on how really you are as a business.

This is because, at this stage, businesses have different levels of traction. Also, it takes time for an investor to get comfortable with the business and the founder.

You Will Have To Sell

To raise capital as well, you will have to sell to investors. What do you aspire to build, and what is your vision for your business is what you need to keep in mind and then sell the investment opportunity. You will have to convey, why you are the person, they should back and not your competitor. You convince them of worth their capital and time.

investor must be convinced by your vision
