

90% Of Businesses Are Not Able To Raise Capital

We have already seen how demand for capital is for more than supply of capital. As a result, very large percentage of companies looking for capital are unable to raise it. This is the harsh reality. Also not every business deserves that capital as their assumption might be wrong, their results not tested etc. The bottom line is if you are business can become something big then it will sooner or later attract capital. However, is the founder one need to be prepared mentally for the time it will take, the friction in the process and even at times failure to raise capital. They must have a plan on how they intend to keep operating otherwise too.

You have to prepare yourself to be among the 10% that do receive capital. You also should have solid reasons why you are going to become big and why investors should invest in you.

Thus, keep in mind the value proposition of your business, how you can scale your business, how you will make money out of it, etc. These things need to be answered before raising

You need to fix all these in phase to prepared to raise capital.
