

Shortage Of Capital Is The Best Time To Be Creative

The most creative time for any business is when capital is short, as it forces them to think out of the box, and the subconscious mind gets into action looking for creative answers. Though still, some problems might remain, a shortage of capital allows you to be creative. This is my kitchen phase is often the phase where most creativity kicks in. Here, the founders are trying to do more with less and this forces them to come up with really creative solution.

When you have capital, you often fall in the trap of using capital to solve problems instead of getting creative. Thus, the best time to be creative is before you have raised capital. Test value proposition, instill creativity in business plan and then look for capital. Having these answers will help you raise capital better than when you are unprepared.

If you raise capital on something that does not work, you will not only lose your business but also your reputation, which will come back to haunt you later on. You do not want to raise capital on a business that is not working. Thus, raise capital when you are confident that your business is ready to scale.
