

Every investor has experience based on which they invest in things that have worked for them in the past. Thus, it's more about finding the right investor than trying to get your idea through to every investor out in the market.

Rejections are for the idea in its current form or stage. It is only natural that they might find confidence in other ideas they want to invest in. However, somewhere down the line, when and if you make progress, same investors may come back. Your best bet is to keep talking to investors while not taking away the focus from your business

The fundraising process is your business problem

F

customers, etc.

It's very creative and fix the channels, finding

KS