The above are the things to keep in mind as a founder. These are easier to say but quite difficult to follow, and all first time founders are guilty of some mistakes. Having the right mindset as a founder will make this emotional journey, more process oriented,

To summarize what we have discussed,

1. Fundraise takes time, and only a few businesses are able to attract capital. Thus, your business needs to have that quality and give the investors that confidence.
2. Shortage of capital is the best time to be creative, and too many rejections should not be taken personally. The best founders have faced rejections multiple number of times.
3. You will have to sell and ensure not to put your core business aside while raising capital. You must work on the business and look after its growth.
4. Plan to sustain till you raise fund, and remember that fundraising is only a part of it. The bigger picture is building the business.

To summarize, in this chapter we discussed-what investors are looking for, how they think and how the math works at their end? We also discussed how a founder can be better prepared for the same.
