

SUMMING UP...

Not every business can make it through the entire journey. There is a survival rate businesses die at every stage. But, it is generally important to grow at the right pace by talking to the right investors at the right stage. You don't want to talk to the Angels too soon or the VCs too late.

So, these are the different investors, and now you know what they are investing in. Friends and family and people you know are investing in you and not your idea. Incubators evaluate both you and your idea. Angels invest in you after you have some early traction. Professional VCs and Private equity investors are coming for growth. It is your responsibility to talk to the correct investors.

So, this ends our very important discussion on who these investors are, what they want, and when they invest in your growth journey. We will discuss finding these investors and reaching out to them in the next upcoming sections.
