You can seek help from someone with authority, like a veteran in your field. You can even ask them to be an advisor for your business. Having an expert with you will give the investors additional comfort. However, do not do this only to raise capital. Do this if the person adds value to your team too.

Basically, the potential investors are looking for checks on you. If you can tick mark these points, the question around founder goes away. So try working on recommendations and connects. If you can leverage that smartly and reach out to the right people, the chances of success go up.
