

NOT FOLLOWING THE FORMAT

As we discuss earlier, there are no rules when preparing the pitch deck. You can include whatever you want on the pitch deck. But you must also understand that most investors are habituated to a specific format

Most investors expect to understand what the company is about on the first 2 to 3 slides. So you cannot share this, for example, on the 10th page. If the investor does not find the details about your business first, they won't probably even reach page 10.

Obviously, you can change the order but do not make it in a manner that potential investors have to look for answers. You must maintain the basic format. It is very important that you talk about the business, market size, numbers, traction, the main idea behind the business, and the founding team at differ-

These are mistakes you can avoid. Ensure that these things are included.
