

TOO MANY JARGONS

Avoid jargon or technical words as much as possible. For example, if you are from the fitness industry and selling a fitness related product, you might want to explain using technical jargons. However, the investor will not understand them and will most likely pass. Thus, use language that the investors understand not something that someone in your field might speak. Keep the language as simple as possible.

For example, if you want to talk about “weight”, use that specific word. Do not use technical words like BMI or anything else.

Obviously, a few of investors will understand your industry, but you can't expect everyone to know about it. You will lose out on potential investors due to lack of understanding
