He says any elevator pitch should include three lines.

These include The first line about what exactly your company does.

For example, at Zebra Learn, we can say that we sell educational products, courses, and books.

Another example can be Netflix. Netflix can say that they sell subscriptions for movies. This is one line about what you actually do.

One line on your current status

You can follow it up with a line about your company's current status. Current status essentially includes that you talk about traction. You must show that things are working

For example, Netflix in its early day could say:

"We are a subscription company for movies. Currently, we have about 50k paid subscribers."

This shows that what they were doing was working

One line on the market or opportunity size

Netflix could have said:

"We currently have 50k subscribers, but we can scale up to 10 million within the next five years"

Or else you can talk about the market size. For example:

"It is currently a lot more going ahead in the future." KS
