

We will discuss various aspects of pitching here. But to be honest, no one can teach you how to pitch. You will only get comfortable after several pitches and practicing at the same time too. You can work with your seniors and instructors, who can point out specific things in your pitch. But ultimately, it's a soft skill that can only be acquired with time and experience. However, this should not stop you from pitching. Once you talk to a few investors, you shall get comfortable.

During the pitch, the investor is looking for confidence in your proposition and you as the founder. The pitch is likely the first time they will ever meet you. Before this, they only have a basic understanding of who you are. So, it is critical that they feel confident about the founding team during the time of pitch.

One of the best preparations for pitching is repeatedly practice. Practice adds flow to your presentation rather than it being spontaneous.
