

Another critical step is getting your pitch reviewed by people you trust to add value and give critical feedback. Talking to people like other founders, investors, consultants, and investment bankers can be helpful.

So practicing the script and getting it reviewed are the best ways to get a polished pitch. You get your voice and confidence only after doing it a few times. Ultimately, if your idea and the traction numbers are solid, the market is exciting, and investors can be confident in you there is a good chance that the capital raise will go through.

To sum up, the most important thing to achieve is investor's confidence in you and your ability to grab their capabilities. This is your first interaction with them.
