

So far, we discussed about preparing the pitch deck, reaching out to investors, and how to pitch to them.

Now, let's assume that the potential investor is interested in your business. They will now ask you to for documents to understand your business better. This will help them better understand how you are thinking about your business and your plans ahead. They might ask you to present a financial projection of your business.

They may also ask you for documents such as:

- Organogram and hiring plan
- Valuation roadmap
- Competitive landscape
- Marketing and sales plan
- Competition feature mapping
- Customer checks and feedback
- Tech flow
- Asset Schedule

Now, it is on you about how much you want to share. You might still not want to share any critical data. You can communicate the same to potential investors. They might still continue or pass the opportunity depending on how critical the data is.
