

The investors will give you their capital. However, they will also offer their experience and time. Obviously, they won't do the work for you but will give you enough time, for example, an hour a month or maybe more than that.

You can anticipate critical feedback from investors during these meetings. They would be able to point things that you may miss. Additionally, they can help you with introductions that can lead to significant growth in the business.

The investors might assist you if your business performs exceptionally well and needs more capital.

They could contribute money themselves or connect you with others who could participate in next rounds of investment. You will greatly benefit from these introductions to others because it will speed up the process of accessing additional capital when you are growing at pace.

So summing up, fundraising is a long-term relationship to grow by accessing the required capital time, effort, strategic inputs, feedback, introductions, credibility etc.

In the next unit, we will discuss what exactly you are getting into and what you will face along with that.
