

[illegible]

Suppose you require employees from a tech background. So you must create separate rows for a senior developer, a junior developer, React Native developer, and so on. Simply put, you have to list all the different types of employees that you plan to hire. The Employee sheet's total expense must be calculated based on this.

Similarly, you have to create separate sheets for customer acquisition costs. It will have separate rows for marketing costs, the amount you plan to spend on advertising through let's say, Facebook or Google. You also need to enter the costs expected for ads on other channels.

For Acquisition Cost sheet will F [redacted] spend, the revenue you'll generate, and the overall return on ad spend.