

Large companies have cash flows and profits that are tried and tested with a long operating history.

However, startups usually have limited operating history. Some may even be only a few months old.

As a result, estimating correct value for a startup is difficult.