

The above steps will need the help of a lawyer, CA, and CS. You'll also need an RVA or a registered valuer who can help value your start-up or business. CS and lawyers are majorly required for the job. If the investor takes charge of the due diligence, you do not need to find people to perform the due diligence.

The entire process can take from 25-30 days to 2.5 to 3 months, depending on the length of due diligence. For an early-stage company, the due diligence will be relatively short, i.e., a week or less than a week. Then the entire process can be done in one month. However, if the investors want longer due diligence, the process will take a little more time, i.e., more than a month.
