

03 Loss of Autonomy

This is something which might happen. All of these depend on the selection of the correct investor. Suppose you are lucky enough to get the right set of investors for your business who think alike and give you the space to operate, experiment and then come up with results. However, your accountability towards investors will increase and you cannot run the house the way you please. However, this brings discipline in the business and benefits the company.

Newspaper articles about disputes between founders and investors are frequently read by us. The disagreement might be over how the business should be run or who will benefit financially and in what form. This is dependent on the investors you meet and, to so luck.

F

ks