

9.3 WHAT IF IT IS NO

What If It's a No?

This is to be considered the relative default case for a sustained period.

It is important to keep looking and keep surviving in such a scenario. This means you must keep talking to investors and pitching your idea to them. You have to keep your company afloat, focus on the business, etc. This is important as the majority of people lose focus on the business and focus only on fundraising. This is a hindsight approach, a poor decision, as focusing on the business is crucial.

You can sustain for some time on your own given that your business is not a cost upfront business requiring a lot of equipment from day one itself. In such a case, you will need external capital. Otherwise, you can easily sustain with some service element or ship a basic version of the business to people. With time, the company business will grow, making you more investable than many other companies in 6-7 months.
