

There are many types of journeys of business, starting from the ones that start very well and then fall flat to the ones that start slowly but build on it steadily. Your journey will be unique as well.

Do not compare your business and yourself with others, as it adds additional stress and increases pressure.

At this point, you have to be creative and solve the problems. Being creative will help you get some revenue to sustain your business. Remember that it is not going to be a no forever and only means "not yet". Keep working on the business, and slowly and steadily, your business will grow. Also, the ultimate goal is not to raise capital but build business. You can choose to do it without the investors capital as well.

The process is quite drenching mentally and emotionally but quite rewarding to grow your business. Evaluate other funding sources if investors are not putting in the capital depending on the nature of the business. Try to get side income, service-based income initially, keep your business afloat.
