

SUMMING UP...

So this is what we are getting into when raising capital. It is not only about the capital; it is the relationship, the support, the introductions, the criticism that you get, the tough rejections that you get from the investors, etc.

In the next section, we will dig deeper into the practical part of things. We will be asking important questions like do you even need a fundraiser? Most people read a few notes here and there in the media and think that their business is doing good and that they should raise capital. That might not always be true.

In fact in some cases raising capital might be counter-productive too. Let's evaluate this in the next section. They assume that more capital will help them grow bigger and faster. But it is not only more capital; there are thousands of other things.

F

ks