

We hear a lot of news around different companies raising different amounts of capital. Lot of us look at the glitter and start thinking of raising capital. We start associating fundraise with success.

However, raising the capital for your business is just the first step; that is, it is just a stepping stone and is not the ultimate destination or the end goal. So once you have raised capital, you will understand that the difficult part has just begun; you have to build the business now. Raising funds is anyways difficult; now, you have to do the main task of building a business, which is the ultimate goal.

FUNDRAISING

So the idea is to understand whether your business requires additional capital. Even though every business can benefit from some extra funds, not all businesses require that extra capital. Some businesses can build themselves from their own profit as well. For some businesses, additional capital can be counter-productive as well.

If a business raises too much capital, it can lead to irrational expenses.

- You may have irrational expenses.
 - You may g
 - You may b
