

SUMMING UP...

 ZERODHA
(No external fundraise)

So these are the general ideas that you need to understand. But you have to deeply reflect in your mind whether or not you require a fundraise. Not every company requires fundraise to grow. You can do exceptionally well on your own. There are a few examples in the market who have done exceptionally well without raising any external capital.

For example, there is the case study of Zerodha. The company did fabulously well without raising any external funds. This is because they enjoyed good margins and economies of scale. They also figured out a way to distribute their products at a lower cost. Even though they had a huge market potential or opportunity, they kept moving forward without external capital. So now, after 10-11 years, they have become a huge multi-billion dollar business without any external capital.

So this is the basic idea. You do not always need a fundraise to run a solid business. It can be run in a very stable and profitable way on your own as well.
