

Obviously, there are certain exceptions. Suppose you are a founder with a very rich history, like you have been one of the senior managers of a well-established company. In that case, the investor will be more confident in the founder. The investor will believe that you know what you are doing. In such cases, the business may raise capital even before it is ready based on founders history. However for most others, we will have to ensure that the business is ready.

So here is a general list of questions that you need to ask yourself:

Do you understand the market?

Do you have traction?

Do you have a business plan?

Do you see a large market opportunity?

Are you ready to commit?

F

ks