

For example, you are an EV company.

Simply speaking, do you know what the essential parts of your business are?

If you are in this market, you need to know how to build the car, where you get the supplies, what problems it is currently facing, and how to solve them. If the investors are not confident on your understanding, you will have a difficult time raising capital.

You need to have a good understanding of the product and the customer base and research thoroughly. If you do not, you need to spend some time understanding the market. You can meet a few people who are already in the market. You must regularly meet the experts, the suppliers, the retail people, the intermediaries, distributors, B2B clients, B2C clients, etc.

The question you need to ask is: What is the business in which you want to win in the industry?
