

05 ARE YOU READY TO COMMIT?

This is one of the major questions. This is your business, and you have worked pretty hard for it. Are you ready to commit 5 to 6 years of your life or longer than that towards the business? Someone else is investing their capital in your business. They will expect you to work hard on the idea. The investors expect you to put in the required hard work and effort to scale the business. They expect you to solve the issues within the business, develop a good product and then sell it to a large customer base.

All these things will require a considerable amount of time and personal sacrifices on your end. So you have to ask yourself if you are ready to commit personally and as a team.

Well, most founders are ready. However, for some founders and trying out an idea, are you sure you are completely ready? This is because once you raise capital from an external source, you will have to work hard for the initial years and only after that will you get a result. Even if the business fails to work out, you will have still lost a few years. Can you afford that? Are you ready to commit?

However, if the business works out, this is going to be one of the biggest achievements of your life. You will spend at least 7, 8, or 10 years in such a case. People usually spend their entire life building a stable company. So you have to ask yourself if you are ready to commit to sacrificing a lot at your end for a sustained period.

If you are in the business, you want to dedicate years to industry. You might have a lot of side businesses raising capital may not be their best idea. You should only raise when 100% sure.
