

SUMMING UP...

These are some of the questions that you have to ask yourself. The traction part is yet to be covered. We will understand traction shortly. The questions are:

-
- Are you ready as a business?
 - Do you understand your market and the scope or opportunity in it?
 - Do you have a laid-out business plan, and how do you want to go ahead? Again these things will change with time, but do you have a specific direction right now?
 - Lastly, are you willing to commit for a long period?

If the answer to all these questions is yes, you should go ahead.

Otherwise, you can take your time to figure out the answers. This will probably take time. Once you have clarity on this, you must move ahead only then.

Obviously, there can be thousands of reasons why you are not ready as a business or a founder. For example, some markets are too young or old for the investor's comfort. You will get the necessary feedback and places where you can improve and weaknesses.

F

ks