

These are some numbers you can demonstrate to potential investors. In this case, they can't question whether or not your product is working. You have number/traction to demonstrate that your solution solves the problem for the consumer.

So, for example,

If you have a lot of sales, you can demonstrate to a group of investors that your offering is working, and you can scale the business up.

Alternatively, you can also demonstrate the number of registered users you have and how you intend to monetize them.

You can also show a waitlist that if you build this product, you have an audience willing to use it.

You can demonstrate these things to the potential investors that whatever you are doing is working and is worth their attention. So if they put money into the business, you can demonstrate the ability to scale it up, and to a good return for the investment. And secondly, you can also create a meaningful and sizable business out of it.
