

ARE YOU READY?

Now you understand the traction and understand your current level of traction. You understand how it gets investors interested. However, do not fall into this trap where you think you are not ready. You will never be 100% ready. Start talking to investors after a point with the numbers you can demonstrate, and you have answers to all the basic questions. You can go out and talk to a set of investors, and you will get the necessary feedback. They will help you by identifying the problems with your business idea and you as an investment case. You can then work on these issues, and after 3 to 4 months, you can go and talk to them again.

So now take some time off, and think whether you need a fundraise and, secondly, whether you are ready as a founder, company, and market to raise external capital. If the answers are yes, move ahead. In the next section, we will be discussing momentum.
