

KITCHEN PHASE

This is the phase where you start with a problem and see if your solutions work. You experiment a lot with these solutions. In this phase, you have identified the problem and have a basic idea of what you can do better. However, you have nothing concrete.

The business is still in the research and development phase. You are putting together the first version of the product and accumulating resources to get your concept into shape and test the market. During this phase, you conduct experiments and see which approaches are working out and which are not. You evaluate whether business value for customer or not. You evaluate whether your business has value for customers or not.
