

GROWTH PHASE

This is when you know your business and there is enough traction to scale your offering. This is when you look for rapid growth. This is when you build business processes, and each step that can be replicate at scale. Now, this is also when you may require subsequent rounds.

The larger investment round such as series A,B,C, etc. generally happen at this stage. Also, not every business requires external capital after certain point.

SERIES A

SERIES B

By this stage, the business processes are set and the company is looking to rapidly grow its business.

You have an established business and you can attract meaningful capital for business growth. Very few businesses make it to this stage. They die at different stages along the way.

By growth stage - Large investors start taking interest. The company becomes too big for it to be relevant to smaller investors on the execution front. Focus shifts from growth related to growth rather than execution.

F

KS