CREATIVE PROCESS

In the initial stages of every start-up, nothing seems to work. You have to make changes; you have to fix things. As this is a creative process, you must come out with different solutions every time you face a roadblock. You have to be creative through this process. At this stage, it is all about fixing problems creatively.

At this stage, for everything you will have multiple ideas, try different things. Few of them will work while most others will not work. You will creatively look for answers and fix things.

This is where capital is limited. The only two things that you are giving to the business are effort and time. You can work as hard as possible in this phase as you do not have a lot of managerial headaches to deal with. This phase is all about getting the basic value proposition right.
