

While designing the value proposition, the challenge is in getting the right match between the products and customers (product-customer fit).

Luxury Car in Country side

Tough Car in Country side

For example, while designing a car to be sold in the countryside, one must take into consideration the needs of the customers. A luxury car may not be as effective as a tough car with a high fuel economy and the ability to ride on rough roads.

Value propositions can exist at the industry level as well as the business level. When comparing at the industry level, the value proposition must be compared to the value offered by substitute industries.
